Application Guidelines for the International Education Research Course in Graduate School of Medical Sciences

International Education Research Course

The purpose of the International Education Research Course is to provide the opportunity to international students becoming the top-class leaders in medical science research and/or education fields. This course is specialized for international students to study in English without learning Japanese.

In the first year, students learn the basic knowledge including methodology, which is required to become the international researchers, by the lectures of general scientific subjects carried out in English. Students also learn research techniques in the laboratory they belong to. In the later part, students must conduct thesis research under the supervision of the head of laboratory they belong to, and will be required to have published at least one first author article in a highly regarded international journal and finally expected to be the leading persons in various medical science fields.
